CONSERVATION PLANS IN TIME WITH SEASON

With the apparent early spring enabling farmers to start on their spring farming work, much favorable comment is being heard regarding the early deliveries of ground limestone and 20% superphosphate being furnished to farmers through the Agricultural Conservation Program for carrying out soil improvement practices on their farms.

The County Agricultural Conservation Committee, composed of Edmund C. Smith and Robert Hastings of Bethel and Francis Buzzell of Fryeburg, report that they have approved requests for 1100 farmers in the county for a total of 3500 tons of ground limestone and 1100 tons of superphosphate. Farmers made out these requests with their community committeemen who helped to plan out a program for each farm, not only as to the crops to be grown such as corn, beans, etc. but as to the improvement of pasture and hayland as well. Lime and superphosphate are two of the basic materials to bring about improvement and when used in connection with manure or other commercial fertilizers, better and cheaper feed for livestock can be produced while building up the soil at the same time. Although much of the lime will be used where corn beans and such crops will be grown, the superphosphate is not furnished to farmers for such use of growing an immediate crop, so will be used on new seedings, hayland, pasture, and orchard sods. Many livestock men use it in the barn behind the cows as an easy and thorough way to mix it with the manure which then is a balanced fertilizer material when well cared for.

The community committeemen in this vicinity who have assisted farmers to plan out how they are going to use the Conservation Program on their farms are: Warren Abbott, Rumford, Mexico and Hanover; Guy Bartlett and William Chapman, Bethel, Mason, Gilead, Milton and Albany; Fred W. Wight, Newry, Magalloway Pl., Lincoln Pl. and Upton; Nestor Tamminen, West Park, Woodstock and Greenwood; Lawrence Marston, Waterford and Denmark; R. F. Kluckner, Stoneham.

In closing the County Committee wished to point out that farmers who have not yet signed up with their community committeemen to take part in the 1941 Program should do so at once as the last chance for signing up is June 30. This also applies to the orders for lime or superphosphate to use this year.

Another thing which all community committeemen have told farmers but which the County Committee wanted to emphasize still further is that the Program closes August 31 this year making it very important for farmers to use their materials this spring and not wait until fall. It is probable that orders will be taken along in September for lime and superphosphate for use under the 1942 Program giving farmers a chance to get these materials to use in the fall and winter.

DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME BEGINS AGAIN SUNDAY

GORHAM HERE FRIDAY TO OPEN BALL SEASON

Gould Academy gets off to an early start this year by playing Gorham High School on the local field at 3:30 Friday.

The Gould boys have been practicing for two weeks and prospects appear fairly bright for a successful season. A squad of 30 reported but has been divided into varsity and junior varsity groups, 16 players being retained on the varsity.

Perry and Wright are leading aspirants for the back stopping berth, with Perry slightly ahead because of his ability to move around faster. However, Wright is only a Sophomore and will be used frequently. Jenks and Crockett will hold forth on the mound until Barker becomes eligible. Both have a world of stuff but haven't as yet conditioned themselves to work nine innings. A contest looms between two Juniors at first with Ireland leading Morton by his more consistent batting. The rest of the infield finds the veteran Clough probably taking over the all-important short stop berth with Berry, a Freshman, on third and either Robertson or Coolidge at second.

The outfield will be made up of Amato in left, a letter man of last year, and either Jenks or Crockett in center and either Coolidge or Robertson in right. Cummings will still have something to say about right field when he conquers his desire to swing anything, especially high balls. Other candidates who will see action are Swan and Stearns; outfielders, Adams and Farrington infielders.

A practice game with the "Townies" last Saturday resulted in a 25-10 victory for the Academy team. Both teams hit the ball hard but the "Townies" offered very little in the way of defensive play. Jenks with 5 for 5, and four doubles, led the batters while Perry pounded out 4 for 5.

Defensively, Berry made one remarkable stop while Cummings appeared a long foul drive in one hand. Amato and Jenks held some hard hit balls to singles by virtue of their hustle and pegs to second.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

RAINY WEATHER PICTURES

Don't worry about rain—just seize the picture chances that it creates, indoors and out. Try indoor shots such as this, using your photo lights to brighten up the shadow side of the subject.

RAINY weather brings its own picture opportunities, and there's no need to fold up your camera and tuck it away when the water comes showering down. Rather, you should have the camera out and keep it doubly busy.

Rain brings you reflections on the wet streets—a misty quality in the air that lends interest to scenes about town—and a chance for many human-interest shots. Pictures of people hurrying along under umbrellas—window-shopping in streaming raincoats—these are interesting additions to the album simply because they're so rare.

Rain also brings you many an interesting "detail" shot—such as the sparkling gutter-spout, or the wet umbrella and overshoes in the hall. In a small puddle of their own making. Such snaps can be both interesting and pictorial. And what about outdoor scenes, taken through a streaming or rain-splattered window? Just focus sharply on the window itself, and if the scene beyond is a bit out of focus, so much the better—it will have more of a genuine rainy-day feeling.

If it's a rainy afternoon, the children will be at home. Seize this opportunity for those indoor shots that need a daylight effect. The rainy-day light is soft—not harsh like direct sun. Supplement it with the photo lights that you use for night shots, and you'll obtain delightful pictures—Billy at a window, with ball and catcher's mitt, peering out at the wet landscape; Betty with her paper dolls on the window-seat. You'll like the quality of these "indoor-daylight" pictures.

The purpose of using the photo lights is just to brighten up the shadow side of your subject. The proper film is a high-speed type, such as you use for night snapshots. This film is also best for outdoor shots on a rainy day—it's faster, and so you can make snapshot exposures despite the weaker light.

Don't fret about rainy days. Take advantage of them. They bring you picture opportunities that are novel—interesting—and lend variety to your album.

THE LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY GROVE

I guess just about everybody democrat or republican will agree that Benjamin Franklin was quite a person. We debate just about everything, but when it comes to Franklin we kinda get together—anyway when we get on the platform or the radio—and are maybe looking for votes.

The proper thing to do, which ever party you are in, is to agree with Franklin and Washington and Jackson—during the campaign.

The thing I got in mind about Franklin is his saying—"It is difficult for an empty sack to stand upright." There is something for Congress to ponder.

If this Congress which we have there now wants to do something so as to go down in history so their grandsons will not be ashamed to admit that grandpa was once there on the spendthrift Potomac, they gotta get busy, pronto.

Yours with the low down,

FIRST-AID to the AILING HOUSE

Types of Heat.

QUESTION: Can you advise me as to the heating of a house that I plan to build? Is steam heat more efficient than gas or oil-fired air-conditioned heat? Can you tell me about how much more expensive gas is to operate than fuel oil? Is the maintenance cost about the same on each? Which system would you advise?

Answer: The efficiency of a heating system is not gauged by the type of heat, but by the quality and design of the equipment that is installed. Steam or air conditioned heat will keep the house warm, if the heating plant is sufficiently large. The air filtering and humidifying features in air conditioning systems are favored by many home owners. These features are desirable, providing, of course, the system is installed by a reliable firm having a thorough knowledge of this type of heating. Comparative costs depend entirely upon local gas rates and fuel oil costs. Your local gas company and oil burner man can help you on this better than I can. The maintenance cost may be slightly higher on oil fired units.

Cracked Plaster.

Question: The walls of my house are of unfinished plaster, and were recently decorated with casein paint. There is one particularly bad crack in the wall. How can it be repaired?

Answer: The crack is probably from settlement, and may grow worse should settlement continue. If so, you will be wasting time and material to do any patching until settlement is over. If you feel sure that the crack has reached its limit, you can repair it with patching plaster, to be had at a hardware store. Widen the narrow part of the crack with a knife to admit the patch, and for the entire length of the crack, make it wider at the lath than it is on the surface, so that in hardening, the patch will lock itself into place. Directions for using patching plaster are on the label of the box.

Cleaning Wood Floors.

Question: What can I apply to hardwood floors to remove marks, such as scratches and spots, as well as several layers of wax? The floors are almost new, and I do not want to have them scraped.

Answer: To remove scratches from shellacked floors, wipe with turpentine. Or, small scratches can be treated with a little denatured alcohol, put in with a soft camel's hair brush, and deep scratches with a little thin shellac. Varnished floors should be treated with varnish. You can clean the floors by wiping with liquid floor wax and plenty of clean cloths. Polish by applying good paste floor wax in thin coats, rubbing well. Floors that are badly scratched should be scraped, preferably with an electric sanding machine.

Papering Rough Walls.

Question: The walls throughout my house are textured plaster. Can this be smoothed to make a good surface for wallpaper?

Answer: Go over the walls with sandpaper wrapped around a block of wood to take down the highest points of the texturing. Then, using the same kind of plastic paint, that was originally used for the walls, fill the remaining roughnesses, using a brush or trowel. Final smoothing of the wall can be done with a trowel, or with a rubber squeegee, such as is used for washing plate glass windows.

Cleaning Silver.

Question: Silver spoons were left in two silver dishes, and have made black spots that no amount of polishing will remove. How can I clean them?

Answer: When silver has been spotted in that way, the only sure method of cleaning is to have the job done by a silver-smith. Salt should not be allowed to remain in contact with silver.

NEW IDEAS FOR HOME-MAKERS

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

FEMININE headgear usually holds its shape best if it rests right side up on a stand that fits inside the crown, but this is not true of a man's hat. Its dashing lines may be preserved by placing it upside down in a holder. All of which is worth remembering when you are fixing up "his" closet or even when you are generously preparing to share a small corner of your own.

The man's hat box, shown here, is covered on the outside with maroon and blue cotton print and lined with blue chambray. The lid and the front of the box are hinged with adhesive tape before the covering is pasted on with stiff paste. The stand is made of cardboard, as shown in the sketch, and is covered to match the box. The maroon bias tape edging of the stand is cemented in place in a way that you may find useful in making many other things. The secret is in spreading the cement evenly on both surfaces, letting it dry, and then vulcanizing the two together with the heat of the pressing iron.

NOTE: Why not put away Winter things all nicely mended? It will be grand to get them out in perfect order next Fall. Mrs. Spears' Book 2 shows you how to do the most professional kinds of mending, as well as every day household mending. There is a simple, quietly made zipper bag for five garments in SEWING Book 6. Tips Picked Up in World Fashion Centers

Your entire ensemble can carry out the sailor theme this season, if you wish.

Fashion tricks to make the life of the working girl less complicated are the collars, cuffs and ruchings that button on and off.

Capes have literally taken over the sports field both in active and spectator costumes. They are being shown in everything from terry cloth to knitted fabrics.

Beige tones not only lead the parade in new spring dresses and suits, but also in furs.

News in bathing suits is the knitted wool sweater top—a bra with short sleeves—worn with shorts to match, leaving the midriff bare.

Scarves display a patriotic motif this year. Newest are those printed with Lincoln's Gettysburg Address stamped against the background of an outline map of the United States.

THE STORY SO FAR: In an effort to substantiate rumors that 200,000 foreign troops were in Mexico preparatory for an attack upon the United States, Intelligence Officer Benning went to Mexico City. Here he joined the staff of the unsuspecting Van Hassek, leader of the foreign forces, and gained the confidence of two other officers, Pincke and Bravot. Discovering that foreign troops were poised for an invasion of the U. S., Benning returned to Washington to report to Colonel Flagwill, acting chief of Military Intelligence. Flagwill stated that forces were also reported massing in the Mediterranean and the Far East. That night Fort Houston, Texas, was heavily bombed. Reports that an enemy bombing squadron was approaching Washington threw the city into panic. Now continue with the story.

"The President of the United States is dead."

INSTALLMENT VII
Hysteria was spreading. Thousands were fleeing the city in taxicabs and private cars. Cavalry was ordered into the city from Fort Myer to help police clear masses of people who flooded the parks despite frantic radio warnings that crowding up was dangerous.

Benning dismissed all thought of trying again tonight for the Van Hassek spies. He wondered again if he had made a serious error in failing to arrest Pincke. It was plain now that the Austrian had known this was the night of Van Hassek's zero hour. What mischief was the fellow up to? What use had he planned of his vaunted knowledge of ballistics?

A finger of light leaped into the air across the Potomac. Benning went tense as he saw the restless movement into the skies of that ominous beam.

Another bolt of light shot up, the sky filled with those long pennants rising from the Sperry drums, driven upwards with the intensity of their thousand million candlepower. The bark of a cannon crept across the river. It told Benning that the lights had picked up an enemy craft within their six thousand yards' range of observation. Other cannon barked. The three inch guns were driving at the ships.

Gravely he lifted his wrist close to his eyes and strained at the luminous dot of his wrist watch.

Thirty racing seconds ticked by. Forty. Benning braced himself, wet his lips. His hand was stricken by an agony. Through the crackle of actual he caught the ominous roar of motors in the sky. At this instant bombs were plummeting downward, he reckoned, released three thousand yards or more to the south-west of Washington while the planes flocked toward the city.

A vivid yellowish street of light washed over the city, low against the earth. In the next instant came the clap of thunder as the mighty detonation smote the city. Benning felt the earth reel under his heels. His ears rang with the reverberation. Another crash, a third, fourth, fifth. The titanic wrath of the bombers smothered all sound of the anti-aircraft in a bedlam of volcanic fury that defied all existence. Two more crashes, separated by short intervals of time.

Silence came swiftly, a hush that yielded no sound for several seconds. Then, as his ears recovered, Benning caught the shrill roar of motors overhead, the sharp staccato of machine-gun fire. Near-by, the crews of the .50 caliber anti-aircraft machine guns were peppering away inanely. A few rounds of futile bursts and they ceased fire. Now came the sound of excited masses of people.

Benning headed into Fifteenth Street. People were running this way and that on the heels of hysterical, unbridled terror. Others were massed in stricken silence gaping into the skies. Taxicabs and automobiles sped crazily in all directions. Benning saw pedestrians bowled over by wheeled vehicles, scattered policemen were trying to stem the tide of panic. Sirens screeched as ambulances and police cars raced into the targeted area.

It was a few minutes before midnight when Benning turned into Pennsylvania Avenue. There was no such thing as a taxicab in the present disorder. He walked rapidly on past the White House, intent on reaching Munitions by twelve. Bayoneted sentries paced placidly back and forth in front of the President's official mansion. The place seemed calm and bomblike in the vague light of a quarter moon, the sunken mass of its gray walls unbroken by a single lighted window.

But Benning, as he hurried on, knew that behind those screened windows grave conferences would carry through the night as the heads of government charted the desperate course of an unready nation plunged suddenly into war.

On reaching Colonel Flagwill's office, Benning found the G-2 chief engrossed in the verbal report of an air service staff colonel. As near as could be judged, the attack on Washington had been made by a single bomber squadron of seven planes. The bombers had been accompanied by a squadron of pursuit ships. The anti-aircraft reported no hits, and was setting up now to cover the city as best it could against the return trip of the invaders.

"It'll not be very long now before they're back over the city for a second fling at us," the air officer predicted, speaking in a calm voice. "No report yet of damage to important buildings, but one bomb came pretty flush into a crowded street and we have a preliminary report of heavy casualties."

"No word of any other squadrons headed this way, Colonel?" Flagwill asked.

"None. We'd have picked them up if any more were coming tonight. But what puzzles us is how these bombers expect to get back into Mexico without refueling. Especially since the bombs dropped sounded like heavy ones, probably a thousand pounds or more."

"I'll want all details as rapidly as you get them," Flagwill instructed. "By the way, have our planes taken off for Texas yet?"

"Yes, sir. We've notified Operations. Our Third Wing will have one attack and two pursuit squadrons at San Antonio before daybreak, all ready for business. Other forces will report there as rapidly as possible."

The telephone buzzed, a summons for Flagwill to conference with the Chief of Staff. Flagwill gathered up his notes and turned to Benning.

"You'd better come along, Captain. There may be some questions on Mexico City for you to answer."

Briefly, as they marched down the long corridor to the staff chief's conference room, Benning sketched in his own observations of the bombing of Washington, emphasizing the panic in the streets, the chaos and disorder that followed.

The floor under them reeled with the impact of a sudden terrific explosion in the distance. Flagwill's expression did not change, there was no hesitation in his gait.

"Here the birds are back again," he muttered. He shook his head despairingly. "We've been pounding the public by radio all evening not to bunch up, but I'm afraid people will have to learn by costly experience. God, but I hope no persistent gas is dropped! I doubt if there are a dozen gas masks in all Washington."

Another savage detonation filled the night. As its vibrations waned, there came the uninterrupted clink of typewriters and telegraph instruments as messages went hurtling across the country from the War Department mobilizing the country's armed forces.

General Hague's conference room was filling with generals and colonels, all self-possessed, but with the effects of fatigue and strain in their faces after long days without rest. They were promptly in the room where they stood until the four-starred head of the Army, now in uniform, came in. General Hague was grave and lined, but his shoulders were erect and his gray eyes burned with a level vitality.

"Gentlemen," he proceeded at once, "I've gone over the situation in detail with the President. First I'll give you a brief summary of available enemy information."

His voice was drowned by a roar of sound that rocked the building with its volcanic force. Four monster bombs, falling in quick succession, rang in their ears. Then came a silence that seemed filled with some portentous omen. General Hague licked his lips and gave a nervous smile.

"I must confess, gentlemen," he said, relieving the tension with strained levity, "that the report you just heard from the enemy is a bit later than the information I was prepared to give you."

Tight-lipped gravity yielded a flicker of a smile around the table. The general resumed.

"Three enemy columns are reliably reported at our Texas border and it is a reasonable assumption that they will bridgehead the Rio Grande tonight ready to attack at daybreak. Likely enough the main body will strike from Laredo with the objective of San Antonio. Two other columns are likely to strike from Brownsville and Eagle Pass."

"You are familiar with the bombing of San Antonio, Galveston, New Orleans, and Houston tonight. We hope to give those cities the protection of our air forces, beginning tomorrow, but we are at the mercy of night raiders for the time being. I needn't tell you that all the Army's anti-aircraft would not be sufficient to protect Washington or New York, let alone our other major cities. It will be months yet before our new anti-aircraft weapons are out of factory."

"As for Van Hassek's land invasions, I am sending our Second Division to meet them. Our 11th Infantry will fight a delaying action in the morning. The Second Division will hold along the Nueces River or at least south of Antonio. It looks pretty hopeless for our troops. I needn't tell you that nothing can save San Antonio and the occupation of our great oil and sulphur belts. It looks pretty hopeless for our troops."

"The President has given us carte blanche. We are mobilizing our entire Regular Army and National Guard. This—"

An aide-de-camp, face bloodless and eyes starting from their sockets, burst into the room. General Hague glared sharply at the interruption, then stiffened as he caught the stark tragedy that was written in the officer's face.

"Please, sir, will the General take the telephone?" the aide stammered in a rasping whisper. "It's—important."

The Chief of Staff took the receiver of the portable telephone that was handed him by the aide.

"Yes, General Hague speaking," he said.

There followed a stifling silence. General Hague sat with the receiver glued to his ear. Into the leaden silence of the room came the faint metallic squeak of an excited voice. The assembled officers saw their chief stiffen as if an electric current had been driven through his body.

"What!" he gasped, then again, "What—repeat that!" His teeth sank into his upper lip, all color drained from his face, leaving it ashen and ghastly. When he spoke again his voice was limp and leaden. "That's—incalculable, Colonel—too unthinkable to be true."

General Hague stared dazedly across the room for several moments. His hand that held the telephone instrument descended in a slow limp arc to the table. The aide took the telephone and removed it to an adjoining desk.

"Gentlemen," General Hague focused his eyes, looked about among them, waited for control of his voice, then spoke firmly, "Gentlemen, by the ill fortune of circumstance, the enemy targeted upon the White House with a heavy bomb. The President of the United States is dead."

From out in the night came the screeching of sirens. The shrill screeches rose above an indescribable rumble of sound, the frenzied cries, and excited shouts of a terrorized populace. The bombers had raced on back into the south. The fretful bark of the anti-aircraft guns was stilled.

"Gentlemen," General Hague's voice broke the stricken tension of the room, "we will proceed with our business."

The head of the Army resumed his chair and fumbled with trembling fingers among his notes to pick up the shattered thread of his observations. The others sat down to a funeral solidity.

"Getting back to the enemy intentions," General Hague resumed, his voice dry and hoarse, "we must now consider only his immediate objectives. We cannot now deny him possession of the world's largest oil fields lying in that region generally north of Beaumont. At the same time he gains the vast sulphur belt north and east of Galveston. We may reasonably expect, therefore, that Van Hassek will drive on to establish his army on some such east-and-west line as Fort Worth—Dallas—Shreveport."

"On the President's authority the orders have gone out mobilizing the Army and National Guard. We're moving the whole Third Army down to look after Texas and will reinforce the border as rapidly as possible. We concentrate the Second Army in Illinois, the First Army near Boston, and the Fourth on Puget Sound and in California."

"Naturally they must all go in at peace strength and conform to their present tables of organization even though those tables are hopelessly out of date for modern warfare. Industrial mobilization will be started at once, though, of course, that will move very slowly."

"Yes, gentlemen, we'll take an awful beating in Texas for the time being. Lack of ammunition for all weapons will be a serious problem. Our lack of anti-aircraft guns will bring us horrible losses. The country will be in an uproar for days to come—until the people get educated to this terrible new reality of their existence."

"But all of this merely increases our own responsibilities. We must do the insuperable, we must achieve the impossible, we must face this crisis with patience and keep before us the protection of our country against later serious attack which I fear is inevitable. Gentlemen, let us remember this—"

General Hague rose to his feet and the muscles of his jaw hardened. He looked about among them again and his voice crackled as he concluded, "No matter what force may come against us, no matter what may be our initial reverses, our country has the basic character and the resources in manpower to make us invincible. In the bitter end of whatever storms may lie ahead, the forces, or coalition of forces, that dare attack the United States, will find the mighty vengeance of our massed valor. That's all for the present, gentlemen."

THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 1941

At times it seems that Bethel folks' actual devotion to the interests of their home locality is less than that of the normal human being. Of the many ways that this trait can be shown, its negative aspects are often most glaringly shown by the person who can see nothing good near at hand. It is generally agreed that the far pastures are greener, but that can be carried too far. Without doubt many of our town's difficulties, such as they are, could be overcome if the state of mind of its inhabitants could be cleared. Faults need not be overlooked; neither should obvious advantages be forgotten. Even if there are a few things not exactly to our liking, we still have many things that other towns would like for their own. Trading at home is only one way of supporting home business. Telling of your home town's advantages, not bragging, will go far to create or foster a home town respect which every town should have. Patriotism begins at home!

Robert Louis Stevenson wrote: There is only one wish realizable on the earth; only one thing that can be perfectly attained: Death. And from a variety of circumstances we have no one to tell us whether it be worth attaining. A strange picture we make on the way to our chimeras, ceaselessly marching, grudging ourselves the time for rest; indefatigable, adventurous pioneers. It is true that we shall never reach the goal; it is even more than probable that there is no such place, and if we lived for centuries, and were endowed with the powers of a god, we should find ourselves not much nearer what we wanted at the end. O unmerciful feet, travelling ye know not whither! Soon, soon, it seems to you, you must come forth on some conspicuous hilltop, and but a little way further, against the setting sun, descry the spires of El Dorado. Little do ye know your own blessedness; for to travel hopefully is a better thing than to arrive, and the true success is to labor.

THE FOX AND THE GRAPES

GOULD ACADEMY

TRACK AT GOULD

When the announcement was given three weeks ago that track practice would begin for the spring season, more than 26 boys from all classes reported for uniforms. Prospects for a successful 1941 season began to look bright from that moment on. Not only is the present squad a replica of last year's County Champions, but some surprising "finds" have been discovered among the newcomers as well.

This year the cindermen are being coached by Mr. Rathbone, ably assisted in the weight events by Mr. Vachon. Early in the season the squad voted Sidney Howe as Captain. Sid is a four event man and holds two records in the Shot Put and Javelin on the Gould track. We expect Sid to break more records before the season is over. Other members from last year's squad include: Bud Runyon, Erik Brown, and Charlie St. Thomas in the Hurdles. "Shorty" Blanchard in the Weight events. Whip Abbe in the 100 and High Jump. Howard Grover in the Mile. Don't forget to keep an eye on these new men: Irving Cummings, Bob Morrill, Raymond Swan, David Hawkins, Dick Peabody, and Earle Barlow.

In the interclass meet which was held last week six first places were won by this new talent. It was a close race between the Seniors and Juniors, the former just nosing ahead in the last three events. The final results were: Seniors 53½, Juniors 41, Freshmen & Sophomores 2½. Earl Barlow was the high scorer of the meet. "Red" flashed to a winning finish in the 220, 440, and half mile, besides snatching a second place in the 100 and Mile respectively. The Seniors who won numerals were: Bull, Barlow, Baker, Morrill, King, and Peabody.

The schedule of Varsity meets for this spring is perhaps the toughest encountered for several years.

We Women Watch History

We are a peace-loving people, and we hoped, when the tumult and the shouting of the World War died down, that the nations of the earth were ready to live together as friends. We hoped it so strongly and believed in it so sincerely that we insisted on getting rid of the plants and factories that had been used to provide our arms and munitions in '17 and '18. Wartime machinery was smashed under gigantic hammers and sold for scrap metal. The making of smokeless powder, declined to a tiny fraction of previous output, and the industries involved turned to the making of goods and products for normal consumption.

We women played an important role in the peace movement. Remember? We realized, probably more keenly than the men, the bitterness of war, and we dreamed a great dream of well being and abundance. Why shouldn't these things be ours, we asked, with the greatest industrial system in the world devoting itself exclusively to the production of peace time products?

We worked out many of the elements of that dream here in America, too, before the period of world unrest which saw European dictatorships grow daily more powerful as they batted on economic unrest in their own states. And one fateful week last Spring, Americans—men and women alike—were brought face to face with the realization that the way of life we cherish was menaced.

American industry was called upon to forge the weapons that would make our freedom strong. At first it was on the basis of "business as usual" plus defense. Then as events continued to unfold ominously industry was called upon to apply "speed and more speed" to production for defense.

The defense accomplishments of industry to date will go down in the annals of history as living evidence of the potentialities of a free people. It is not the way that American men and women would wish to prove the value of their free institutions. But it is striking proof that they cherish those institutions above all else, and that we in this country are enterprising enough and intelligent enough to find the means to see that they shall survive today's storms.

American women will remember this march of events as times move ahead. They know that there will be trying times and sacrifices ahead for all of us. But they know, too, that we are going through these efforts so that we can have a future which will be worthy of all the endeavors and all the strivings that the history of the last few decades has imprinted on the scroll of American history.

Washington Hears Conflicting Reports on

WASHINGTON.—One of the interesting events to watch in the capital these days is the welcoming of a traveler who has safely returned from the great west or the wide prairies. Washingtonians gather around him with wan but hopeful smiles on their faces. They are never quite sure whether he is about to pull a peace-pipe from under his blanket or a tomahawk.

And they are not sure whether the tomahawk is meant for use on them or as a sign that the wild tribes of Chicago and Pittsburgh and Cripple Creek and Hollywood are ready to join the militant East in a good old-fashioned war-dance.

Of late some of these returned travelers have surprised the braves who collect the wampum and the medicine men who sit around the council fires along the Potomac.

Surprised at what they hear from the peaceful folk who live in the valley of the Father of Waters and who are tilling their fields on the great plains and among the Rockies. While these distant Americans are loyal to Big Chief in the White Teepee (according to the Gallup poll), "they just ain't a-spollin' for a fight."

In other words even some of the writers and pamphleteers who have been most enthusiastic about aid to the democracies at all costs have changed their tune. They are beginning to say that the American people are still so strongly against permitting America to become a belligerent that Washington must step carefully lest it go too far in that direction. I have very good reasons for feeling that the President is beginning to be influenced by this feeling.

Diplomat's Viewpoint.

Recently I talked with a foreign diplomat whose country, still at peace, is trembling under the threatening shadow of the dictators. He said he found it hard to understand the American people. He was sure that they were willing to save the democracies from defeat at any cost and yet they seemed to be solidly against putting this country into war. "It reminds me," he said, "of a line from the poet Goethe," and he quoted:

"Two spirits dwell within my bosom."

Some of the President's associates who are able to look on the situation abroad objectively and are in close touch with our observers in foreign parts are saying, in effect, this:

"The present American foreign policy is not being run counter to the majority of public opinion."

"It is fully realized that while parts of the East and certain groups in Washington are ready for United States participation in the war immediately, the people as a whole would object strenuously to getting us into the conflict."

"But they feel that even if this country should take steps which lead us nearer to the edge of the conflict than we have already gone, they believe that Germany is so anxious to avoid a formal state of war with us that she would hesitate a long time before bringing about such a step."

"In other words even if we were to convoy British supply ships to the very edge of the Western hemisphere, to Greenland for example, and there was an open battle between an American warship and a sign and offering free board and lodging to wild life.

Already more than half the nation's game exists on privately owned farm, range and forest land. Department of agriculture officials tell me:

"The biggest part of our work of conserving our national resources of quail, pheasants, doves, rabbits, squirrels, raccoons, opossums and many other kinds of valuable game and fur animals must be done by individual farmers—right on their own land."

That is why benefits under the Triple A go to farmers who plant odd corners with trees and brush and grains and legumes which furnish house and hearth of the wild folk.

So now many a patch of scrub rock in a field that once was a desert island has become an oasis where small animals and birds live and move and have their being.

Given a pat on the back the wild life helps the farmer, eats the bad bugs. Given a chance to forage in the upland growth and woodlots and helped with a little food that the state is glad to furnish, they do not bother the crops.

Spring Comes To Nation's Capital

Spring comes to the Capital. A cheerful squirrel is begging for peanuts in the shadow of General Lafayette's statue. Suddenly it darts for a tree as a newsboy cries:

"Whole col-lum an-eye-a-lated in Balkans."

The newsboy passes, selling his blood-spattered news.

I watch the squirrel. He watches the newsboy, then darts down to the grass and rolls over three times in sheer glee at not being a man...

Walking down with the government workers in the morning: I pass the tall and dignified brick facade and the great, sheltering dome of St. Matthew's cathedral.

A couple, arms locked, pass me. They have walked this same path, this same way to the same office for years. But today, after an Easter holiday, a bright new platinum band is on her finger.

A sudden spot of color on Washington's wide Sixteenth street. A little row of one-story, brick houses. Once they were slave quarters, now they are squeezed in between a stiff, grim brownstone mansion and a tall residence with high peaked roof and belying bay window, prim clipped hedges. The dweller in one of the little brick boxes has painted his front a warm red. It glows like a glass of chianti held against the light.

Today the farmer is rapidly breaking down this ancient fear and with the encouragement of the government—material as well as moral—he is hanging out the welcome

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

BATTLE: Of Greece

Descriptions tending to show that the Battle of Greece was becoming even fiercer and more furious than anything which had taken place in France or the Low Countries were penned by newspaper correspondents during the early days of the Balkan struggle, although these correspondents were having difficulty in getting their stories across.

Never in warfare had there been such confusion in reports. One day the Nazis predicted that the Yugoslavs would "surrender in 48 hours," that "tens of thousands of prisoners had been taken," that King Peter had fled to Turkey and that General Simovic had done likewise to Moscow.

On the same day the Yugoslavs denied all these reports and said their "resistance was stiffening," told of bitter "counter-attacks" and urged the people not to believe false reports.

Nazi reports that there had been a governmental overturn in Croatia were followed by dispatches telling of the invasion of Croatia by Hungary. On almost the same day came Serbian dispatches telling of "stern resistance" north of Zagreb. In the very territory where the Hungarian invasion was supposedly taking place.

Athens was virtually the only source, except Berlin, that was apparently getting news direct. From the Athens dispatches came a series of events that clarified themselves, though the picture in the press was still much muddled.

These told of two main achievements on the Greek front by the Nazi invaders. They were (1) the breakthrough from above the Struma river valley, and (2) the capture of Salonika.

The latter came with a suddenness that was utterly shocking to those who believed that the Greeks would do the impossible, and put up a stern fight. It also was a shock to those who had believed that the British were based on Salonika.

A glance at the map showed the impact of the news. Eastern Thrace had been cut off, and how many Greek soldiers were in that territory Athens did not know.

The Nazis immediately sent out a dispatch saying that 300,000 men had "lost" in their arms. The Greeks said they were continuing to fight but admitted the eastern forces had been cut off. It was not immediately apparent why they would have to surrender, for the way seemingly open for them, if beaten, to retreat and interne themselves over the Turkish border.

Concrete evidence of the manner in which the U. S. Army is being expanded in line with the defense speed-up is this view of the motorized Ninth division during a review at Fort Bragg, N. C. Some 15,000 men and about 1,500 vehicles of all types participated with three infantry companies marching in front of the motorized units.

Another vital phase of the battle then manifested itself, when it became known that the Greeks had decided to make their main defense line a V upside down, stretching from near Valena on the Adriatic up to Lake Ochrida in the center, and to the Aegean near Katerina on the east.

It became known that from Mount Olympus, mythical home of the Greek gods, near the Aegean sea, to Lake Ochrida was the "Anglo-Greek line" and that here the main resistance could be looked for.

The contact came after about five or six days of fighting, when the Germans broke through at Monastir (Bitoly) and ran slap into heavy British and Greek contingents.

What happened then was not clear, but the Greek dispatches immediately began to take on a new note of confidence. The Germans had been hurled back—their advance had been shattered, the Germans were in full retreat—these terms and others of like ilk were used.

Whether this would prove a turning point or a standing point where the war might halt its fierce movement, remained to be seen. Typical of the puzzling reports were some that told of British and Nazi tank battalions clashing in an open plain—when the relief maps showed the line to be drawn in a mountainous territory.

According to the most optimistic Greek report, the vanguard of German tanks, motorized armored cars, motorcycles and divebombers struck against the organized central line of the Greeks and British on a 12-mile front.

The report said "the defeat of this German column was a terrific disaster. The German tanks, motorcycles and infantry were hurled back into a broken retreat on a 12-mile front, from Florina to Vanitsa."

Berne, Switzerland, was one of the few points which was sending anything that sounded at all reasonable about the Yugoslavian situation. It seemed that the Serbs were planning to defend a big triangle, mostly mountainous, which seemed to leave Belgrade and other parts of the Yugoslav plain territory undefended.

One corner of this triangle was the southeastern town of Skopje, but the fall of this point was early claimed by the Nazis. But for days thereafter the Yugoslavs were reported from Berne to be counter-attacking vigorously in this neighborhood, and to be driving southward from central Yugoslavia with determination and courage, determined not to be cut off from the Greece-British lines.

Part of the German strategy, however, was to accomplish just this, and early it was claimed that the Germans and Fascists in northern Albania had joined hands, though this was not borne out immediately in subsequent stories from the front.

Winston Churchill did not try to gloss over the situation, in fact, in an early report to congress, he seemed to take the attitude that the Greek-Yugoslavian defense was in all probability a lost cause at the outset, and warned Turkey and Russia that they would be next.

Turkey, evidently suspecting that Germany's end move would be to demand passage through her country to the Mosul oil fields, and thence to Syria and Iraq, as indeed some Nazi newspapers predicted frankly, promptly began to evacuate Istanbul and to declare all of European Turkey in a state of siege.

Russia openly criticized Hungary's entrance into Yugoslavia and gave further evidence of a change of heart as far as Germany was concerned, but took no drastic step except to prepare her armies to move for "summer maneuvers."

Churchill warned that some "surprise move" might come from Russia, and indeed the whole of Europe watched expectantly.

NEUTRALITY PACT: Soviet-Japan

In an unexpected diplomatic move Russia and Japan announced the signing of a five-year neutrality pact between the two countries. In effect the pact provided that either nation would not become involved should the other find itself involved in war.

The pact came as a surprise to international observers who had been inclined to believe that the Russian government was beginning to lean away from axis-dominated policies. It was said in some sources however that Russia was anxious to be sure that she would not be attacked by Japan should the Soviet find it necessary to open a military drive against Hitler in the Balkans.

For Japan the pact looked like a green light for a further stepping up of war against China and an expansion move to the south in the Pacific area.

LABOR:

Stress Eases

Although 400,000 soft coal miners were still locked in a disagreement that kept mines in 12 states idle, it was obvious that this strike was just "slow in settling" and that the general labor situation was better.

The Ford strike was settled, Henry Ford for the first time in his career entering into an agreement with a labor union, and the great River Rouge plant with its 85,000 employees was reopened.

Statisticians figured that the strike had cost wage-earners several millions of dollars, the figure running as high as $8,500,000, probably taking into consideration several thousands of workers who had been forced into idleness by the closing of the main plant.

The immediate lessening of pressure in the strike situation did not, however, mean that the whole thing was "under control," for there were many bitter fights looming over the horizon, one of them involving General Motors, another threatening U. S. Steel, and several others threatening smaller plants.

LEON HENDERSON

Chairman Dies of the Un-American Investigating committee claimed there was a Communist plot to tie up the vital aluminum industry.

It was almost a relief when the picture changed somewhat and the forces in Washington began to train their guns on employers instead of employees, for a change.

Leon Henderson, vibrant former member of the SEC, and head of the President's price-control setup, was given additional powers and set up almost as a price czar.

His first pronouncements came as a clap of thunder. He announced that there was "ruthless profiteering" among the producers and dealers in cadmium, a vital defense metal. This was his first "shot" and it was followed quickly by others.

He named 11 industries in which there was profiteering and announced that he intended to stop it. He was asked what prices were too high, and answered "all prices are too high."

He then bared his weapons. He said that his theory was that price increases would never "bring out production" and that "jail sentences" wouldn't do it either. He talked about economic "sanctions" against profiteers, and said, in the cadmium instance, that if the profiteering didn't stop, the government would "put the dealers out of business" and that "they would have only themselves to blame."

He even stepped out into the arena and announced that he considered wages came within his territory, because they were a "prime factor in costs." He said he would find ways and means to keep wages down if they got too high, also.

Americans took Mr. Henderson with a grain of salt, perhaps, but it was a change in a picture which had painted the forces of Labor as the Big Bad Man who was halting national defense, and showed a new picture in which the Businessman was the villain, and not the worker.

U. S.:

Attitude

Following his messages of comfort and friendliness to Yugoslavia and to Greece, President Roosevelt promised "all possible aid" as "soon as possible" to both countries, and then took two steps which seemed to fall in line with the general war picture.

Dispatches were telling of British planes "rushing into the battle of Greece in constantly increasing numbers," but how many of these were being rushed across the 6,000 miles from the United States was a military secret.

The two steps President Roosevelt took openly were to take over for this country the defense of Greenland, by special agreement with the king of Denmark.

The second was to open the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden to American ships carrying aid to Britain, Greece and Yugoslavia. To get by the neutrality requirements, the President announced that the material would be carried into the Suez canal, but not out of it, which would set the cargoes down in Egypt, which was technically a neutral nation.

How it would then get into belligerent hands the President hinted was none of America's business.

Some isolationists whooped it up against both of these moves on the part of the administration, but the word was generally received throughout the country with calm, most people figuring we were practically in the war and that this was another step.

The Greenland decision apparently left Hitler cold, for he made little reference to it. Yet it was important because Nazi planes had been reported flying over Greenland, and if the U. S. was to look ahead to the time when it would have an air base there, that would have meant an air battle between American and swastika-marked planes.

Too, the Germans had drawn their blockade line within three miles of the border of Greenland, and three miles, said naval experts, was a mighty small bit of sea to handle, from a neutrality standpoint.

But Hitler had his say about the Red sea plan, saying curtly that if American ships entered the Red sea they would be attacked by Germans and sunk, if possible. This reply, like his reply to the seizure of German and Italian ships in this country, left the people generally cold. There was neither fear nor surprise nor anger among the "men in the street," just apathy, with much more interest expressed in labor conditions than in the foreign policy moves being devised and issued by the White House.

The only result of the Greenland episode was the recalling to Denmark of Henrik de Kauffmann to Copenhagen. DeKauffmann, in announcing that he would leave this country, simply pointed out that his country was under the control of the Nazis and that he could not obey the order of his king and turn the defense of Greenland over to the United States.

Economic Highlights

National and International Problems Inseparable from Local Welfare

The attention of most people is now centered on the Balkans, where Germany and Britain are fighting what may prove to be one of the decisive actions of the war. But in official circles, the problem of the Atlantic remains uppermost in mind. Hitler cannot win the war unless he can conquer the British Isles. American policy is to provide England with every possible weapon in an attempt to prevent that ominous possibility. And all of the weapons needed with the exception of large bombers, must be transported by ships across three thousand miles of blue water, much of which is infested with Nazi submarines and surface raiders. Even if we reduce German claims of Allied shipping destruction by one-third to one-half, it is evident that the British merchant fleet is being rapidly cut down.

There are two possible solutions to this problem. One is for this country to build enough ships to offset British losses. But even if that could be done, which experts doubt, it would not stop the loss of tremendous amounts of material. A cannon or a fighting plane or a load of food which sinks beneath the Atlantic inside a gaping hull is of no service to anyone. The solution remaining is to eliminate the cause of destruction.

This was the theme of a recent and remarkable radio address by Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the Maritime Commission. This was a speech of such importance that, according to an Associated Press writer, "it could hardly have been delivered on his own responsibility alone." Admiral Land said time may prove that combined American and British shipbuilding is unable to keep up with losses. The wiser course, he said, is not to pin hopes on providing sufficient replacements, but to stamp out Germany's submarines. By basing our shipping aid to England, he added, "solely on supplying her with more and more ships, we are merely adding more fuel to the fire. Are there not a number of ways of solving this problem by putting out the fire?"

The between-the-lines-reader will find a great deal of grave food for thought in this. In Washington today the feeling is that it will be but a matter of time, and probably a short time at that, before we are conveying British merchant shipping. Our virtual annexation of Greenland for military purposes indicates the way the wind blows. Greenland offers potential naval and air bases to patrol and control a vast Atlantic area. Then, come think, it will not be much longer before our fighting craft, surface, undersea and air, may have to be used to ferret out and destroy U-boat supply and rest stations. As everyone knows, the British navy just isn't big enough to control all the seas where British interests exist. It is no secret that British strategists are confident that we will help as part of our all-out aid program.

Big question is, how far can we go before Hitler declares war on us? No one but Hitler himself can answer that. It is believed that Hitler would think twice before forcing a state of war between the Reich and the U. S. for the obvious reason that the war declaration would be at once followed by Executive and Congressional acts to speed up our arms production to a point beyond that possible when we are at peace. Some even think that there could be actual shooting between U. S. and German ships without a complete severance of diplomatic relations.

All of this, however, belongs in the realm of speculation, and the future will supply the answers. Next step is likely to be passage of a law under which the President can buy and turn over to the British, the Axis and Danish ships recently seized under a little known 1917 statute making sabotage of any vessel in American waters a felony. The White House has been completely mum so far as talking about convoying is concerned, but almost all commentators think it will come when the time is ripe.

In the meantime, it is reported that considerable amounts of goods are piling on New York wharves for lack of bottoms to take them to England. That is the toughest problem the all-aid program faces at the moment.

The news has been making bad reading for those whose hopes lie with the Allies. Two events have been particularly disturbing.

First, with the capture of Bardia, Axis forces regained in three weeks all of the territory taken during a two-months period in General Wavell's North African campaign. Apparently the British did not figure the Germans could organize, supply and move major forces as rapidly as they did. The British garrisons left in Libya were too small. The Suez canal, key point in the Empire life-line is definitely in danger.

Second, the Russian-Japanese peace pact is a blow to the democracies. It removes one of the deterrents that has been holding Japan somewhat in check in the Far East—fear of Russian opposition. If she went to far, many now think that the immediate result of the pact will be strongly increased Japanese pressure on the Netherlands East Indies and French Indo-China.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT BY MISHMEMOKWA TEMPLE

Whereas: the Supreme Ruler over all has again seen fit to remove from our midst one who has been a faithful and beloved member and whose presence will be sadly missed.

Resolved, we the members of Mishmemokwa Temple extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family.

Resolved, that we as members deeply mourn the loss of our worthy sister, Bernice Spearin, but the memory of her character is with us and she has left the assurance that she joined the great throng about where pain and sorrow never enter.

Resolved, that our charter be draped for thirty days, that a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the records of our Temple, and one sent to the afflicted and one printed in the Oxford County Citizen. We don't pretend to understand just why these griefs must be.

We only know that He knows best. That some day we shall see. But until we understand, May His love great and sure Give comfort to your heart And courage to endure.
